

SOAKING IN STYLE

PARK CITY REMODEL

PHOTO AUDREY HALL

>> The homeowners bought a house on a forested lot in Park City, Utah, for its location and the views. They then worked with JLF Architects and Big-D Signature to remodel the entire home, but most striking was the transformation of the primary bathroom—from dark and dated pink and green into a light-filled, modern space. “We basically gutted it to make the layout flow better,” says Jake Scott, partner at Bozeman, Montana-based JLF Architects. The 24-foot vaulted ceiling was lowered to 10 feet. “With that ‘extra’ space, we created a storage room and an under-the-eaves playroom for the kids,” he says. A fireplace with an ornately carved mantel was removed to make room for an L-shaped double vanity with matching mirrors and fenestration. Above the Iris cast-iron tub, a piece from the homeowners’ collection. The floor and counters are Taj Mahal stone; decorative chandeliers are Rousseau by Hudson Valley Lighting. The oak cabinets have a raised grain, the texture of saw marks providing a rustic touch. >>

ARCHITECTURE: JLF ARCHITECTS, jlfarchitects.com

CONSTRUCTION: BIG-D SIGNATURE, bigdsignature.com

PARK CITY REMODEL The clients bought a log-and-river-rock home for the views but wanted more light, more windows, and a more modern look. "We gutted and reconfigured the bath, removing stone slabs and beige plaster," says architect Jake Scott partner at Bozeman, Montana-based JLF Architects. The deep tub sits in a light-filled alcove. >>

PHOTO AUDREY HALL